Required the segment of a sphere the attraction of which on a point at its vertex is half that of the whole sphere on the same point. Shew that, a being the radius of the sphere, the solution of the question conducts to the cubic equation the three roots of which are possible and positive. By what considerations are two of the roots excluded? 13. The attraction of a sphere, whose density is a function of the distance from the centre, on a point at its surface, is $1-n$ times the attraction on a point at a small depth c below the surface: shew that the ratio of the density (S) at the surface, to the mean density (A) of the sphere, is given by the equation $S^2 na A^3 c a$ being the radius of the...
